

C Jo Gough

I began my life in a place called Indiana. As I set out across America in the early seventies, my camera became my faithful companion. I looked to photography to provide not just the evidence we know, but maybe that unknown that really exist- in the corner of everyone's eyes.

During the early eighties my expeditions took me to Western Europe and then to the former Soviet satellites. After the borders were more freely opened, I traveled extensively throughout Eastern Europe. Now I find my visual interests taking me to the rural villages of Latvia...along the seaports of Poland ...into the upper mountain towns of Slovakia...to the southern river hamlets of the Czech Republic...and up the central hills of Slovenia... always searching for the Borderless Frontiers
